

Music Streaming Service, Qobuz, packs a powerful audio punch with launch of mobile apps

Paris, 13 April 2017 - Qobuz, the fast growing on-demand digital music streaming and download platform, has today announced that a completely new version of its mobile app will be available for iOS devices in mid-May 2017, and for Android users in mid-June. This will allow its users access to the digital streaming service, for an immersive music experience wherever they go. The new desktop version is already available for PC and Mac users.

Qobuz has redesigned the interface of their web-based music platform, integrating richer editorial content and making it available to mobile users. The Qobuz mobile application is highly user-focused offering intuitive playlist management and recommendations.

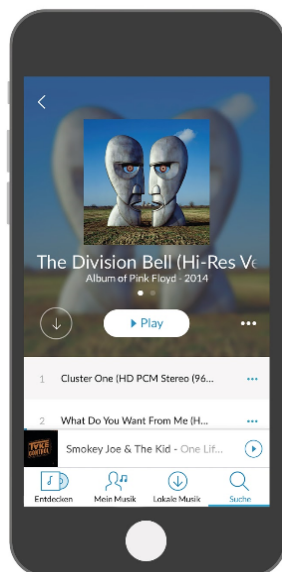

We want Qobuz to serve as a go-to destination for discerning music fans worldwide,” said Denis Thébaud, CEO at Qobuz. “For the past ten years the Qobuz website has generated a cult following of hardcore music and audio fans and now we’ve made it just as easy to open Qobuz on your mobile phone to discover and listen to great music.”

Qobuz provides users with personalised music recommendations curated by Qobuz’s own in-house editorial team and real time trending songs from the Qobuz community via Qobuz playlist, as well as expert recommendations from the music press. Users can also check out Qobuz’s expansive digital discography notes including interviews and more. The Qobuz mobile application will be available from the App Store and Google play. Subscriptions start from just £9.99 per month for unlimited streaming.
